Trail Riders of the Canadian Rockies

BULLETIN No. 38

PLANS FOR OFFICIAL TRAIL RIDE OF 1935

FOR our 1935 Trail Ride an itinerary has been chosen so as to take in the Red Deer River, celebrated among the old fur traders and formerly a great hunting ground although its inclusion with the Banff National Park limits hunting nowadays to the camera and excludes the rifle. There is good trout fishing along this route, and two nights will be spent at the first 2 camps so as to enable anglers to try their luck at Harrison Lake, and there has always been good fishing on the Red Deer River itself. Two members of our executive namely George Vaux (President) and Carl Rungius (Ex-President), rode over the trail last Fall and report that it is in excellent condition and traverses very beautiful scenery. George Vaux has kindly written a brief account of his trip for this issue of the Bulletin, illustrated by photographs from his camera. These photographs are supplemented by others taken some years ago by a former Honorary President, the late Dr. Charles D. Walcott, who spent many summers on scientific expeditions in the mountains adjacent to the Ptarmigan Valley and named a number of the peaks. Dr. Walcott was always enthusiastic about this part of the Canadian Rockies as it illustrates in a unique way the geological history of the range. According to present plans we shall motor about eleven miles from Banff, using by kind permission of the Parks Branch the private road to the crossing of the Cascade, where horses will be waiting. The first camp (used for two nights) will be somewhere near Windy Camp. Then ride over Snow Creek Pass to Scotch Cabin on the Red Deer and turn west to the second Camp. The trail will follow the Red Deer to near its source, and then turn South to Baker Lake and Ptarmigan Lake to a camp in the Ptarmigan Valley. The fifth day's ride will bring us to the Sun Dance Lodge near Lake Louise Station for the Pow Wow. Rate for the five days, including motor bus to Cascade Crossing and motorbus from the Sun Dance Lodge to Lake Louise or Banff — Inclusive rate — $45.

ROUTE OF 1935 TRAIL RIDE

By GEORGE VAUX

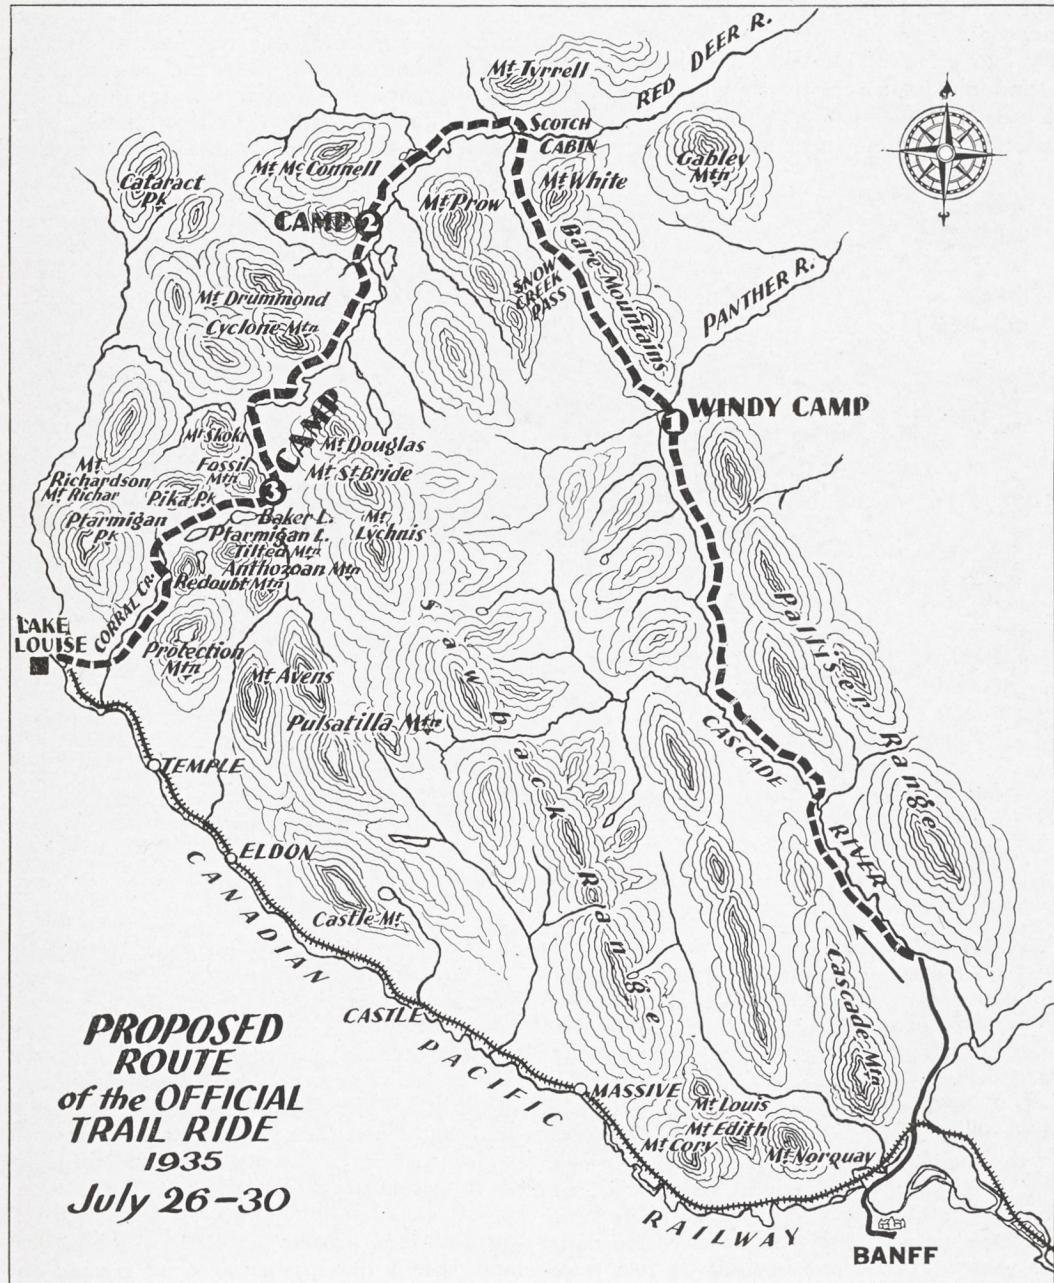

Upon the decision of the Trail Committee as to the locale of the 1935 Trail Ride, the writer made a hurried trip of three days over the proposed route, starting from Banff on August 10th. Through the kind auspices of Major P. J. Jennings, we were transported in a Park truck, escorted by one of the wardens, for the first stage of our journey. The automobile road to Lake Minnewanka was followed as far as Bankhead, where we turned north on a park road which, at present, runs to the first crossing of the Cascade River, a distance of about ten miles from Banff. This was done in order to stimulate the proposed plan for the coming summer, as it is expected that the riders can be transported to this point by some form of motor conveyance; thus shortening the time required for this portion of the trip by a considerable amount.

The horses were found in a little meadow at the head of the trail, on the far bank of the river, the motor road crossing the stream on an iron bridge, which, incidentally, consists of one section of the old bridge which spanned the Bow river at Banff, before the structure. Without undue ceremony, beyond adjusting packs and saddles, the outfit started up the trail which runs north along Cascade River. The country consists of wide, open valleys, bordered on either side by moderately high mountains of the same character as those found about Banff, some exhibiting the curious "writing desk" formation of the Lewis Overthrust. Many years ago, this valley of the Cascade was burned out for a distance of several miles, and the ilver trees and stumps, stripped of bark and devoid of life, bear mute evidence of the tragedy of forest conflagration. Rumor has it that the fire was started by some cigar butts tossed carelessly away, and the remains stand as a striking object lesson to those who would disregard the danger of fire, in any form, among the mountains.

Approaching the head-waters of the river, the party forked right at the junction of Cuthead Creek, a small stream flowing into the Cascade. Rising gradually but rapidly, we soon found ourselves approaching Cuthead Summit, a charming country of up-land meadows and running brooks, with views of the Palliser range on the right. Two small lakes were skirted, one on either side of the summit, showing signs of many moose tracks in the mud beneath the shallow water, but no animals were actually encountered. Descending the north slope of Cut-head Summit, the trail follows a small rivulet which, increasing in size, attains the dignity of Wigmore Creek, and it is now but a short ride to the meadows on the head-waters of the Panther, known as Windy Camp. As we approached the camp-ground, Panther Mountain loomed up on our right until it seemed to stand almost above us as we pitched our teepee on the edge of the meadows, about a quarter of a mile from the warden's cabin.

a few miles is a sulphur spring, to mention but one objective. The photographer will want to be ready with his camera, as the mountain backgrounds become increasingly effective as the trip progresses.

The next morning we continued our way north, up Snow Creek. We thought that the weather was improving, but we had to heave to on the 7300 foot summit, as the horses refused to face a cutting sleet storm, sweeping up the valley from the Red Deer. However, the weather began to clear, and we continued our way down the other side and on to the Red Deer at Scotch Cabin, pausing for lunch in the grateful rays of the sun. At this

A storm was coming up, and we were only just in time in getting everything under cover and breaking out the grub. The horses, unmindful of the downpour, pitched in on the abundant grass of the surrounding meadows.

It is proposed to lay over for a day near this spot, as there are several places of interest in the vicinity. A short ride or hike brings the fisherman to Harrison Lake, with its reputation of supplying that staunch supporter of veracity with evidence to back up his yarns. Those not inclined to fish may ride in several directions. Down the Panther point the trail divides, one branch turning east, down the Red Deer to the Government Ranch, and the other following the river westward toward its head. We took the latter route, bordering the stream, through pine forests alternating with open meadows. A digression was made from the trail to see the falls of the Red Deer, a boiling torrent of water rushing through narrow canyons cut into the rock below the valley floor. The second camp will be made in this vicinity, but our time did not permit us to linger for more than a few moments, so we pushed on up the Red and pitched camp in a little thicket, several miles above the falls, just as darkness was closing in.

From here on the Douglasses were in sight ahead, through the trees, until we finally emerged, almost at their base, with a surprise view on our right of Cyclone Mountain and Mount Drummond, flanked by a huge glacier-hung cirque. Pausing for a few photographs, we were soon in the saddle again and continued to the warden's cabin near the head of the Red, where a halt was made for lunch. Quitting the Red Deer at this point the trail turns south, mounting rapidly between Oyster Peak and Mount Skoki; soon above timberline, the traveller passes through the outer guard of the Ptarmigan region, amid alpine meadows, with here and there a clump of larches. This is the setting for the third camp, in order that the whole of the next day may be taken for the trip over Ptarmigan summit.

Skirting the foot of Fossil Mountain, with views of Mount Douglas and Mount St. Bride on our left, we arrived at Baker Lake, the lower of the two basins of water surrounded by high mountains. Fossil, Tilted, and Brachiopod Mountains, named by the late Dr. Charles Walcott, evidence in their names the geological interest of the region. Skirting Baker Lake, we climbed the mossy slope which separates the former from Ptarmigan Lake. As we reached the summit of the rise, we saw suddenly before us the high-light of the trip, — the view toward Mounts Victoria, Temple, and Hungabee. The great galaxy of glacier-hung peaks lay before us in a glittering panorama of snow and ice, punctuated here and there by dark browns of precipitous cliffs and mountain ramparts.

As the outfit proceeds along the lapping shores of Ptarmigan Lake, the scene shifts and varies, presenting new perspectives of rock and ice, while drifting clouds produce changing studies in light and shadow. Here the photographer may well pause, and consider himself fortunate if he has had the foresight to bring along an ample supply of film. As the schedule now stands, the riders should pass through this wonderland in the forenoon, when the sun will be in the proper position to fall on the distant peaks to best advantage.

Redoubt Mountain and Ptarmigan Lake with Mount Vichemin in distance

Dropping down over the broken and rocky shoulder of Redoubt Mountain, we came into a large meadow, scene of the 1926 Pow-Wow, and so to the head of Corral Creek. But the view is by no means finished and for a goodly portion of the way down, until we strike tall timber, these splendid mountains rear their snow-capped summits ever higher, as we descend towards Lake Louise Station and the Banff motor road. Our trip was finished, and although we had no Pow-Wow, as we passed the junction of the Pipestone and the Bow, we pictured in our mind's eye the scene that would take place on that spot about a year later.

The trip makes an ideal trail ride. The country is open, and the riding easy; there are no steep grades. Fishing is provided for those who follow in the foot-steps of Isaac Walton; and scenery, for those who want to photograph. And speaking of scenery, nature has adjusted her display to our desires in such a way that there is always something finer beyond, until the grand finale is reached with the panorama from Ptarmigan Lake. If the Thunder Bird should neglect to flap his wings, what more could the Great Spirit provide?

PIZARRO AS TRAIL RIDER

Four hundred years ago he shod his horses with silver hoofs.

"While at Pachacamac, he learned that the Indian commander Challuchima lay with a large force in the neighbourhood of Xauxa, a town of some strength, at a considerable distance among the mountains. This man, who was nearly related to Atahuallpa, was his most experienced general, and, together with Quizquiz, now at Cuzco, had achieved those victories at the south which placed the Inca on the throne. From his birth, his talents, and his large experience, he was accounted second to no subject in the kingdom. Pizarro was aware of the importance of securing his person. Finding that the Indian noble declined to meet him on his return, he determined to march at once on Xauxa and take the chief in his own quarters. Such a scheme, considering the enormous disparity of numbers, might seem desperate even for Spaniards; but success had given them such confidence that they hardly condescended to calculate chances.

"The road across the mountains presented greater difficulties than those on the former march. To add to the troubles of the cavalry, the shoes of their horses were worn out, and their hoofs suffered severely on the rough and stony ground. There was no iron at hand, nothing but gold and silver. In the present emergency they turned even these to account; and Pizarro caused the horses of the whole troop to be shod with silver. The work was done by the Indian smiths, and it answered so well, that in this precious material they found a substitute for iron during the remainder of the march."
